VOL. 14, NUMBER 35 MONESSEN, PA., SATURDAY, JULY 24. 1915 SIX CENTS THE WEEK

Local Chautauqua Will Open Program Monday

Monessen's second annual Chatauqua will open their first program of the week Monday and with favorable weather conditions the large tent erected on the Iowa school building grounds will be packed to capacity. The big canvass top arrived this morning and under the direction of Mr. H. B. Richardson, a force of men expect to have everything in readiness Monday morning at 9 o'clock when Dr. J. W. Crook will meet with the Boy Scouts.

The children will meet with Miss May L. Jones at 10 o'clock for the story telling hour. During this period Miss Jones who has received special training for this work at the Columbia School of Expression in Chicago will teach the children in playground and folk-Lore. She will appear each day in the costume of the country represented, which will add greatly to the interest in this work. The work is free to the children and playground teachers and parents will also do well to attend.

Professor Crook will begin his lecture at 10 o'clock on Monday morning taking as his subject,"The Menace of Poverty and Population." Prof. Crook received his degree of Ph. D. from Columbia University and at the present time is head of the Department of Economics at Amherst College. H. B. Richardson who will act as superintendent during the Chautauqua, will no doubt receive a cordial welcome here as he is a native of Bentleyville and is well and favorable known in this section. He received his degree from W. & J. and has served as American Deputy Consul at Liverpool, England. Mr. Richardson's educational, business and civil training has splendidly equipped him to meet the responsibilities of the position of Chautauqua Superintendent. The afternoon program will begin at 2:30 with a musical prelude by the Ziegler-Howe Orchestral Club. They are old Chautauqua favorites and the newspapers have commented in a most generous character and in the highest sense of their work Four young men constitute this company of talented musicians. Following their program Miss May L. Jones will entertain with Indian Folk-Lore stories in costume.

The Ziegler-Howe Orchestral Club will furnish the musical prelude for the evening performance beginning promptly at 7:30 and will be followed by a lecture on "The Man Who Can," by Mr. William Rainey Bennett For eight years Mr. Bennett has stood at the foremost of the Redpath list and his lectures are a great fusilade of facts, fun and fancy. The theme is a good one and ably handled by this noted lecturer. All persons are requested to get season tickets before the opening performance and get there on time as it is a great inconvenience to have the late comers disturb the audience, especially during the lectures.

Paroled Girl Was Arrested

Miss Francis Robertson, who claims this city as her home but who resides in Monongahela was arrested Thursday afternoon on the grounds of the Sheesley carnival company at Brownsville. Miss Robertson was paroled from Morganza along with several other girls about nine weeks ago and the arrest was made by Miss Anne Simpson, parole officer of the institution

At the time she was paroled Miss Robertson came to the home of her sister in this city and it is thought left here with the Barkoot shows. Going to Connellsville she joined the Sheesley shows and followed the company to Brownsville .

Many Prisoners

One thousand prisioners have been entered at the county jail during this year. Some fellows in the county expected that they might be called upon to ring up the big round but it remained for Chas. Webber, a Russian peddler, 55 years old, to be the man. He was committed to jail last night by an information made before 'Squire W. I. Hunter by George E. Nicely. For fine and costs in a trespass case he was sent up for twenty days.

Police Hold Suspect For Local Murder

The negro, John Douglas, arrested by a detail of the State police under the leadership of Sergeant Price, at Uniontown the other day, is still held under suspicion, regardless of the report that he had been released by the police because of the lack of evidence against him. Douglas, is rather a bad looking negro and was arrested on suspicion as being the murderer of Joseph Smith at his home on the Monessen-Webster road, June 20. After his arrest at Uniontown Douglas was taken to a point in West Virginia and is under guard of members of the state police.

The matter has been kept under cover as well as could be by those interested as they firmly believe that the right man has been arrested. This afternoon Sergeant McLaughlin, of the state police will leave for Monesen, there he expects to persuade Mrs. Smith, the widow of the murdered man, to accompany him to a point where the alleged murderer is held. with the purpose of having her identify the negro as the man whom she saw in the vicinity of the home on the night of the murder.

A few nights before the murder a neighobr of the Smiths was held up, it is said, by a negro, and badly beaten up. This man will also be taken along by Sergeant McLaughlin in the hope of having him identify the negro as his assailant.

160 Cases Listed

Conditions in the Clerk of Courts' office is beginning to look bright for an active and busy term of August term of Quarter session court. The trial docket shows that 160 cases have been entered. A number of the defendants in these entered pleas of guilty and will not appear at trial. At this time last year only 130 cases were listed for trail. Thus far two men havebeen charged with the crime of murder. Larceny and robbery appear at the head of the list of crimes committed with assault and battery following.

Mind Afflicted By War Young Man Is Arrested

Andrew Stonage, employed in the bottling house of the Independent Brewing Co., of this city was arrested yesterday afternoon in Pittsburgh when he attempted to discuss the European war with the officials of the University of Pittsburgh. Mr. Stonage is a well known and respected young man of this community but for a number of months he has spent many hours studying the various phases of the great european war and also different patents that he had in view. This excessive study it is thought effected his mind and put him under the impression that he was the only man that could solve the great war.

He resigned his position at the brewery in order to continue his work and last week went to New York to study conditions. Upon his return it was noticed that he had become a fanatic on the war and despite the efforts of his friends he left here on the noon train yesterday with the express purpose of challenging the heads of the University of Pittsburgh in a debate.

Arriving at the University he forced his way into the office of Dr. S. B. Linhart, secretary of the school and attempted to talk over the war with the official. The later telephoned the police station and while Stonengaged them in conversation two officers were hurried to the school and took him in charge. At the police station he continued to rave claiming he was the "1915 Shakespeare" and the "Master of Labor and Love." Friends here were communicated with and he was removed to the St. Francis hospital. His case is not serious and itis thought with the proper treatment he will be discharged from the institution and resume his duties at the brewery.

Died This Morning

Charles Soles, aged 29 died at 5 o'clock this morning at the home of his parents on Arch street following a lengthy illness caused by a complication of diseases. The deceased is survived by his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Soles and three sisters and three brothers: Beatrice and Alphretta at home and Mrs. William Jones of this city; George and Eimer at home and Frank of this city. No arrangements have been made for the funeral.

CHAPTER XII.

Before the Ball.

In her hotel, albeit something of a subject of gossip, as she herself could not but know, Kitty felt herself at least safe from any such occurrences as of late had been her lot. Roleau still was missing.

It was the morning of the great black and white ball when Kitty, her gown finally in her own possession, stood before the tall mirror in her rooms to give it its final proving.

The case on her dressing table now held but a few simple rings and brooches, trifling things which had been given her or which from time to time she had purchased for herself.

The only thing of value which lay upon the table was something which she most wished to conceal, and not to display. The broken coin—how could she make sure that it would be safe?

Kitty swiftly conceived a plan which she fancied would afford greater safety for the cherished coin. There was at hand no machinery of ceremony, even had she been familiar with it. "The simplest way is the best," said she to herself, her lips compressed.

She sat at her desk and inclosed the broken coin in a double sheet of paper. Upon one sheet she wrote these few words.

"Your Majesty, the young American woman so honored with this gift asks its safekeeping for a little time."

She added no signature, but on the envelope—the best the Hotel Ritz could furnish her—she wrote a simple address: "For the King, at the Royal Palace, to be delivered at twelve midnight promptly."

In fault of better messenger, Kitty telephoned now to the bureau of telegraphs and asked for a reliable messenger. When presently he came she entrusted this missive to him with express instructions that he should leave it in the hands of some chosen servant of the king who would be sure to deliver it at the hour of midnight of that very day.

The man listened respectfully, took the missive, and started for the door. Passing, he almost ran against a gentleman in the hall, and dropped his envelope as he did so.

"Your pardon," exclaimed the gentleman, raising his hat, and himself picked up the envelope. The messenger did not notice his fingers quickly closing upon it, feeling it here and there as he presented it to the bearer.

Relieved now of this care, and satisfied that her plan would provide for the safety of this prized possession for that night at least—Kitty passed on to other matters.

Of what use, after all, was half this coin, while the Count Frederick still retained the other half—taken from her by force, by violence?

She stood for a time, her fingers at her lips, engaged in thought. "I am going direct to Count Frederick himself and ask him for the other half of the coin. He knows the king has given me his half—perhaps he will relent and let me match the king's half of the Gretzhoffen coin."

With her to think was to act. A half hour later, ready robed for the street, she was in her car and on her way to the palace of Count Frederick.

They knew her at the count's palace now—or thought they knew her—and so no questions were asked when she applied at the door. Pending the coming of the count, who was at home, as she learned, she was shown to a reception room close to the entry door. As she sat here, she heard footsteps approaching, heard voices in conversation. She knew that Count Frederick was there, but not alone.

Kitty listened shamelessly—for now indeed all was fair in war for her in case like this.

She heard Count Frederick address his companion as "My Lord Minister," and again as "Danislaw," so knew that it was none other than the prime minister of Gretzhoffen with whom he was conversing.

"My friend," she heard a hard, incisive voice declare, "this ball tonight is the crowning mistake of the entire year. It may mean the ruin of Gretzhoffen. I tell you, Count Frederick, revolution is in the air. The people are demanding the answer to all their sufferings, to their poverty, their anxieties. That answer, if we do not use every means to change it, surely will be written red!"

"But what plan do you propose, my lord minister? What can I do?"

"One thing. Let me be blunt and brief—have the king sober tonight! I shame to say those words—but those are my words to you. Have our monarch—whom we reverence—sober tonight! If the people see him drunken, if they find him careless, indifferent in times like this—pouf!—revolution I tell you, and the answer written with the pen of blood."

Count Frederick apparently paused at this. There was a hint of something suppressed in his voice when at length he did reply.

"My lord minister, I'll see the king!"

Kitty thought that now they clasped hands. She heard the prime minister departing, each giving the other formal words of courtesy.

Now she heard Frederick calling to his servants.

"Rubinoff, Franko—any of you rascals—well, you, Rubinoff. Go at once to the apartments of the Count Sachio and ask him if he will join me at once."

Kitty, still trembling in suppressed excitement, waited yet longer before declaring herself. She heard Frederick pacing up and down in the room muttering to himself—heard also after an interminable interval the footsteps of another in the hall—heard Frederick greet him.

"Ah, Sachio, you are welcome indeed. We have news for you, my friend—news that may go well with our plans."

"Command me, my dear Frederick."

"I ask you, my dear Sachio, to do an easy, pleasant and interesting task. It is no more than to go this afternoon, to win in some fashion into the presence of King Michael the Second, our beloved monarch—whom we both reverence!—and then and there, by what means shall seem most expedient, to induce him to drink more wine than ever he did in one day in his life."

Count Sachio laughed loud and long.

"For what purpose, my good Frederick?" he inquired at length.

"For a plain and definite purpose! Listen. As you know, I have had my eyes on the throne of Gretzhoffen since the death of the old king. That throne is rightfully mine, and will be mine. This land is full of discontent—like your own, yonder. The people complain. They are on the very verge of revolution at this moment. This great ball tonight—the thought of its expense has enraged our people. Now, if tonight they see our beloved monarch—whom we both reverence—in his usual or more than his usual state of intoxication—then there's the match to the powder mill. The revolution is begun. The explosion is made. It will be too late, then. Their wrath against the weak Michael—dissipating, wasting their substance for them—will be unappeasable. For the rest—I have made my plans. My own regiments will be faithful. The regiments of the king are none too faithful. The banditti of the desert are with us. Tomorrow there will be a new king in Gretzhoffen, and that king will be—Frederick the First."

Kitty slipped from the room. The hall was empty. An instant later she was out of the great entry and passing to her car.

At her hotel once more she hurried to her room. Here was somewhat to be done. She knew the plot now—all was plain as to the intentions of Frederick in regard to the kingdom of Gretzhoffen and to the monarch who held the throne.

"Your majesty," she wrote in her rolling hand now, "the young American so much honored by your gift—which is returned to your care at midnight tonight—has by chance learned of a plot to injure your majesty and to injure the kingdom of Gretzhoffen as well. Trust her to explain when opportunity shall come. Meantime have the word of one who is solicitous for your safety. Drink no wine. Beware."

Once more she telephoned to the bureau of telegraphs, called for a messenger, and sent her simple missive to the king.

CHAPTER XIII.

A Prisoner.

Having dispatched her messages, Kitty Gray sat alone once more in her room. There came to her mind once more the reflection that now she had not even one portion of the broken coin. As to that which had gone to the king, she felt fairly sure that she might regain it. As to that which had been taken from her by force by Count Frederick, she was far as ever from its possession.

"The simplest way is the best," she once more. "I'll go back t again."

"I was not so fortunate as to monsieur the count at home befo she explained to the attendants met her at the door.

"Monsieur the count has gone but now."

A sudden resolution came to Kitty mind even as a sudden flush came her cheek.

"So? Then I will wait his coming if you please, the apartments of monsieur the count."

The man left her, and she closed the door. An instant later she was at work turning over the articles on the dresser, peering here and there, looking this way and that—and unsuccessfully.

But meantime the attendant who had left her, anxious to be of service to his master, sent out posthaste to summon Count Frederick to his return. He met the count himself, and yet another attendant, upon the point of entering the palace. The newcomer was talking to the count excitedly.

"Excellency, I tell you the woman is outwitting you. She sent her half the coin this very morning—sent it to the king by special messenger. I saw it—I felt it in the envelope, I am sure. There is some plot afoot. And I brought the news as soon as possible, but have searched for you long."

"Come," said Frederick, and he hastened the more when he met the messenger advising him of Kitty's presence in the palace.

Her search still uncompleted, Kitty heard footsteps approaching, and turned desperately like some trapped animal. There was no escape—the narrow window, as she knew, was two stories above the court below. And even as she stepped to the door she met there the smiling, sardonic face of Count Frederick himself.

The honor is mine, mademoiselle!" said he with icy politeness. "True, I had not expected you."

Shamefaced, confused, for once unable to make any explanation, Kitty could but stand and stare at him. An instant later she heard the click of the lock and the passing of footsteps in the hall once more. She was alone! She was a prisoner!

She sat alone, helpless, unanswered in spite of her pounding on the door, her cries for help until she was utterly weary—until the shades of night came.

She looked at her watch. The hour was approaching eleven. The great black and white ball was now in progress at the winter palace across the city.

She went to the window and looked out into the night. All the court was dark—save one window directly below her on the opposite side, fifteen feet below, ten feet across the narrow courtway. Even as she looked down at it she saw a face thrust out—a face upturned towards her.

At the Black and White Ball

"Roleau!" she exclaimed. "Can it be possible? Roleau, help me!" Kitty extended her arms appealingly. "I am a prisoner here—they have locked me in—there is no way out. Help me!"

Roleau's own presence in the palace she did not at the moment undertake to explain. As a matter of fact, he had but that day come in from the camp of the banditti, where he had been detained.

"Wait," he cried, "I will show you."

An iron grating, with the stairs of a fire escape, led down directly in front of Roleau's window. He came out upon this, braced his legs across, and back under the rail, and held out his mighty arms.

"Jump," he cried; "it is safe."

An instant later she was on the iron grating and into the window, and Roleau, gaunt, unshaven, smiling, her friend and rescuer, had led her to the door.

"Come," he said, and without pausing for any discussion, he hurried out, she following.

"It is late, Roleau," whispered Kitty back to him. "It is eleven o'clock. The king goes to the great ball at midnight. Hurry, I must be there. Quick!"

CHAPTER XIV.

The Ballroom.

In his own apartments that evening Michael the king had passed the time in somewhat preoccupied fashion. Left alone, and hence unhappy in his counsels, he welcomed the announcement of the chamberlain who advised him of the presence of the Count Sachio of Gretzhoffen, who wished to pay his compliments to the king.

hand... opened. He ... as he looked ... the word, irreverent when addressed to royalty, and urging haste. "'Important.' Is it so? What shall I do, my dear count? Throw it away?"

Count Sachio cast a glance upon the inscription.

"Your majesty," said he, "it is in the hand of a lady. By no means throw away any letter a woman writes to you—and by no means write one yourself. Am I not good counsel?"

Smiling, King Michael broke open the small hotel seal, frowning as he did so at what seemed to him undue familiarity on the part of someone, he knew not who. But as his eyes ran over the few lines of the message his expression suddenly changed. The words remained deeply written on his mind. "Your majesty . . . young American . . . drink no wine."

Count Sachio looked on respectfully, his glass arrested, naturally venturing no comment. King Michael made no effort to turn the conversation. He left his wine untasted.

"Indeed, our people also are growing in audacity," went on Count Sachio presently. "But I pledge your majesty a long and happy reign." He raised his glass and waited.

"Drink heartily, good Count Sachio," said King Michael. "As for myself, I have dined but lately, as I said. The doctors say dreadful things to me. You excuse me?"

He had poured but a small portion in his own glass, and raised his hand against more.

Sachio was obliged to admit to Count Frederick, whom now he early sought, that he doubted the full success of his errand.

"Leave him then to me," exclaimed Frederick—"he never fails to do as I ask. Make ready for the ball—time presses now. I myself will hasten to see the king before he leaves for the winter palace."

Frederick, making urgent excuses now to enter the apartments of the king after his arrival, found the monarch in the same apartment, stolidly regarding the now empty bottle of wine.

A certain idea came to the brain of Michael, the king, as he now acknowledged the visit of Count Frederick at so late an hour. If this message had warned him not to drink wine—then there must be someone in the world who wished him to drink wine. Why? Who was that person? Might it not be this man here—Count Frederick—the man whom really he feared? If so, would not feigned intoxication serve well to discover the other's nature?

Reasoning thus, King Michael with small exertion of histrionic art managed to give an excellent imitation to his friend of a monarch far gone in wine. Frederick, pleading fatigue and thirst, plied him farther, and Michael apparently yielded, using still such arts as served him for the time being.

When, not too long before the appointed hour of midnight, Frederick left the palace, he left behind him as he was assured, a monarch hopelessly fuddled.

So the lights flamed on at all the windows of the Winter palace.

Suddenly the music broke, crashed and swept into the national air. A murmur went about. The king! The dancers hastened back to the sides of the room. All eyes turned toward the great entrance.

Under the festooned flags, escorted by his uniformed officers, himself wearing all his decorations and garbed as a king should be, there appeared King Michael of Gretzhoffen.

The hour of midnight struck. The eyes of more than one man on the great dancing floor—including those of Count Frederick of Gretzhoffen—looked at the king amazed. Here was no staggering monarch, maudlin in his cups, come to make a spectacle of himself before his people. No, he walked straight as any. And behind him from the street there came not shouts of derision, but something of wilder note, of confidence—a pitiful expression of a people willing yet longer to endure a king.

At the king's side, her hand on his arm, there walked the figure of a tall and beautiful woman, arrayed—as were all those others present—in a costume of black and white, a tall young woman whom not many of those present recognized. A few passed the word, "The American!"

The music of the royal anthem ceased. An instant and the orchestra broke out once more in the sensuous strains of a southern waltz. King Michael as yet did not dance, but he gave word that the ball should proceed. A uniformed officer of the court now approached Count Frederick as he stood not far removed from the royal presence.

"Monsieur, the count," said he deferentially, "I have had for some hours in my possession this package which I have not opened. It is marked to be presented to his majesty at midnight here. Do you think it should be delivered?"

Even as they spoke the king himself, accompanied, in accordance with his request, by the young woman who had entered with him, approached Count Frederick. He raised a hand to beckon to the official.

She Heard Frederick Calling to His Servants.

"Your majesty," whispered Kitty Gray, "that is the package which I myself sent you this morning—take it quickly—I marked it for you at midnight."

"Shall I open it for your majesty?" Count Frederick bent forward politely.

"No," said Michael. "I know the one who sent it. Let herself open it now!"

Kitty broke the simple seal upon the plain envelope in which she had enclosed the coin that morning. She smiled at Michael radiantly now, and at Count Frederick, though not radiantly.

The dance swept on, the crash of reed and brass filling the arched dome of the great salon. In through the great doors came the cries of those not splendidly garbed, those who stood without the palace—"Long live the king!"

But the king stood curiously regarding the change in expression which he saw on the face of the young American.

"Well, then, mademoiselle?" said he.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

If the reader has a "bad back" or any kidney ills and is looking for an effective kidney medicine, better depend on the remedy endorsed by people you know. Doan's Kidney Pills have given great satisfaction in such cases. Monessen citizens testify to this. Here is a case of it:

H. R. Wilbur, 131 McKee avenue, Monessen, says: "I contracted a heavy cold which affected my kidneys. My back was sore and lame all the time and I had to have help to turn in bed. My whole body was like a board. I often had to have somebody dress me. Shooting pains darted through my body and I could not do my work. My body became bloated. The secretions were profuse in passage and contained sediment. I had dizzy spells and hot flashes, and I was miserable in every way. I doctored for years but didn't improve. The first box of Doan's Kidney Pills relieved me and two boxes practically cured me. Now and then I take Doan's Kidney Pills as a tonic, and give them credit for keeping me well."

BERKEY H. BOYD

Berkey H. Boyd, Republican candidate for County commisioner is in town today looking after his interests in the coming primaries. He has a wide circle of acquaintances in this community already, upon which to build his support and by his enterprising and active methods will likely add greatly to his list of local acquaintances.

Mr. Boyd has served this district in the Legislature with credit to himself and his constituents, who feel now that he should have more honor for his efforts in Westmoreland county politics and be nominated and elected to a more enumerative office.

He bears the reputation of being one of the most clean cut and capable men aspiring public office. Mr. Boyd is a strong advocate of better roads in Westmoreland county and greater economy in the expenditure of Public money. Having been an active member of the Republican State committee in the years 1912 and 1913 is helping him materially in this campaign.
